This course is intended to give students an understanding of the changing nature of warfare and its impact on society, both past and present. Military History examines the causes and consequences of warfare throughout history, from the dawn of civilization to World War II, the Cold War, and modern day conflicts. This course is not intended to glorify war, but rather to provide students with important insights into this uniquely destructive side of human nature. In so doing, students will gain an appreciation of how warfare has influenced, and has been influenced by people, technology, society, and government. If you are interested in expressing an interest in this course see Mr. McAskill,
